

A student preparing for a stage performance benefits greatly from adding an Acting & Improv technique class alongside their acting-only class. While rehearsals focus on learning lines and blocking, a technique class builds the foundational skills that make a performance truly come alive—such as spontaneity, listening, character development, and confident decision-making. Improv, in particular, teaches actors how to think on their feet and adapt in the moment, which is invaluable when things don't go exactly as planned on stage. Together, these skills help students feel more prepared, more creative, and more fully connected to their performance.
